That's Just Like Perkins.

That's Just Like Perkins.
The other day, as Bud Perkins, the Storekeeper, was hunting doves on Charlie Houston's farm, his attention was attracted by the piteous how so of a dog in distress. On making a close search, he found that the howling came from the center of a large hemp stack which had been built flat on the ground by Mr. Houston's hands six days before—the dog having been saleep in a shock and the stack being almost completed before it was discovered. Being overcome by his aympathy, Mr. Perkins at once sought a couple of hands and hired them to tear down the stack, release the poor dog, and build up the stack again in as good order as they found it. The dog was a fine large shepherd, which had dwindled to a mere shadow by his six days' confinement, and had chewed the hemp to a frazzle in a circle in the center, but never would have succeeded in working its way out.—Bourbon News.
